Christ's Way of Teaching

Everything was built on his relationship with people. He talked their language. He used their experiences to make his point. He put himself in their position. He made them feel important. He was open to them, all the time. He used the experience of the moment.

A sudden guarrel among the disciples. A man let down through the roof. A sneer from the Pharisees. All these and other incidents became the basis of his teaching. He always adapted his teaching to those he taught. He started with people where they were. He didn't ask them to believe this or that, before he could teach them. He didn't just tell people what he wanted them to know he made them work it out for themselves.

How often he declined to give a direct answer to a question! He didn't have ready-made answers. Rather, by his words, he stimulated people into conversation until they understood things for themselves. He made use of visual aids.

A child, a farmer, flowers in the field, mustard seeds, or a sunset.

Finally, and probably most important of all, he taught by setting practical challenges. So living with him day by day was the most effective education of all.
